As a child growing up in Brussels, I attended a Catholic school connected with (and right across the street from) the Brussels Basilica, the fifth largest Church in the world, and a vast, cavernous edifice, where we often went to pray.

One of my earliest and most powerful religious memories was walking through its majestic interiors, and being awed by the sheer size, hypnotized by the aroma of the incense, wowed by the beauty of the massive stained glassed windows on every edge, and enraptured by the Gregorian chants emanating from the Nave. But more than any of these, I recall being entranced and overcome with deep feelings of connection and longing, and being permeated by what I would later describe as my first visceral sense of immanence and transcendence. I felt in deep communion with a force much larger and greater than myself. And yet, ‘it’ and I were inseparable and indistinguishable one from the other at the same time.

But it didn’t feel like a discovery, more like a remembrance.

Years later, as a first-year student in college, I took a preceptorial on World Religions, and read a book by Walpola Rahula entitled “What The Buddha Taught,” which would change my life profoundly. As I read through its pages, underscoring almost every line with my hungry pencil, I thought to myself: “there it is, that’s it!” The words spoke to the very core of my being. It was as if I were reading my eternal self written into all of the pages.

What both of these experiences had in common was the sense that I was recalling something that I already knew, flashes of recognition coursing through my soul, as if I were remembering not just my very essence, but the essence of God and The Universe itself.

Many decades have passed since both of these events, and now that I exercise my calling on a daily basis, I can’t help but reflect that the core mission of spiritual companionship is helping others similarly recall their true essence, however they might perceive it.

And although it can be described as a journey of discovery in some ways, it is more of a process of unveiling and revealing what has always been there. Stripping away the layers of societal conditioning and habituation, and often of associated traumas and addictions, that have frequently become obstacles to seeing who we really are.

As spiritual companions we are not here to impose our own spiritual discernments, of course, but rather to facilitate those of the people who we are honoured to walk with. We can best accomplish this by being faithful mirrors, allowing our interlocutors to see things about themselves that they don’t usually observe. Very much akin to close friends who help us gain perspective by allowing us to discern our own blind spots, so that we may clear them away, and see more cleanly.

We play another role as well, by being in communion with those who come to us, and recognizing that we are all, in fact, not separate from one another, but rather of the same substance. We need one another to travel on the road.

There is an old parable about desperately seeking the jewel of wisdom everywhere in the world, travelling frantically here and there, toiling mightily in the process, only to discover that it was right on our foreheads all along.

We just need to stop and be still, and remember what a tremendous miracle we all are.

I dance this morning on the liminal edge—

questions burning with longing

frozen with the absence of answers.

To my right a tiny yellow warbler on a trembling green stalk.
To my left, a dandelion puff floats in tandem with another on a swell of wind.

The sun comes and goes, ever-changing palette of khaki, mint, teal and lime—hills proclaiming the glory of the earth.

Rabbis of old tell how we walk the boundary—the liminal edge between fields of fire and fields of ice.

Too close we burn, consumed by Mystery.
Too far, we freeze in the absence of the Divine.

I look around—rivulets sing their way down the mountain, wave grandly to Queen Anne’s Lace.

Acorn shells at my feet—tiny, perfect whorls.

I am neither too hot nor too cold.

The questions are gone.

Do you ever feel that something is missing from your life?

“This book is groundbreaking and important. Becky Eldredge has discovered ways of living out the lasting truths of St. Ignatius as she meets the challenges, opportunities, joys, and struggles of a contemporary American professional, wife, and mom.”

– Mark Thibodeaux, SJ, author of Reimagining the Ignatian Examen and God’s Voice Within

BECKY ELDREDGE is a mom, a writer, and a certified spiritual director. Hearing from her readers and those she directed spiritually, she noticed that most people have a feeling that something is missing. Then, she realized what it was that is missing from all our lives: a deep, personal relationship with God through prayer.

In Busy Lives & Restless Souls, Eldredge interprets principles of Ignatian spirituality in a fresh way to equip us with prayer tools that are accessible and practical within the realities of our daily routines.

If you also feel like something is missing from your life, then Busy Lives & Restless Souls will help you find it—right where you are.

Just that.
WE CAN ONLY HOLD GRACEFULLY IN A SPIRITUAL DIRECTION SESSION WITH ANOTHER WHAT WE CAN HOLD GRACEFULLY IN OUR OWN LIFE...SUPERVISION IS THE TASK OF HELPING US TO NOTICE THOSE PARTS OF OURSELVES THAT WE ARE NOT HOLDING GRACIOUSLY AND GRACEFULLY.”

Can you hear the silent cry
That shouts into the far corners of the earth?

Do you yet feel bathed in waves of sound
That have at their source only emptiness?

One day you will realize that you are Manifesting dancing light

Throbbing from the heartbeat of nothing at all.

A rose blooms early, stretching soft wings against crisp winter air.
Without shelter from cold March winds,
red leaves blacken and fall.
The woody stalk stiffens,
holds close the new buds.
Petal wraps petal, snug layers
nesting a darkened heart.
The gardener breaths
into each blossom:
Holy, Holy, Holy.
Something scared inside
whispers back,
In you I am sheltered;
In you I can open
To share my beauty.
